The 13th Swedish-American Life Science Summit, taking place in Stockholm, Sweden, August 23-25, will focus on Cancer Moonshot, HealthTech Transformation and Impact Investing

The exclusive Life Science meeting returns with its 13th annual summit, focusing on Cancer Moonshot, HealthTech Transformation and Impact Investing. Top scientists, investors, business executives and start-ups meet and discuss important issues, to initiate new partnerships and ventures.

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN - (Aug 22, 2017) - The Swedish-American Life Science Summit (SALSS) announced today that this year's conference will focus on Joe Biden's Cancer Moonshot, including perspectives of living with chronic disease, HealthTech Transformation, that is increasingly driven also by Technology companies and Patients, and how Impact Investing and other alternative Financing can change the business of Life Science.

From the start SALSS is meant to serve as a business platform, but also to provide insights to the future of Life Science and initiate new ideas and collaborations. "This year, I'm excited to feature so many bright and accomplished women from diverse backgrounds in the industry. To secure the future of Life Science we need to support and grow all the talent and diversity available in this field" says Barbro C. Ehnбом, Founder and Chairman.

"We can never put boundaries on innovation. SALSS brings together the diverse life sciences community the world over to collaborate, exchange ideas and share knowledge" says Dr. Bahija Jallal, Head MedImmune, Executive Vice President, AstraZeneca.

The impressive list of speakers this year features among others Gregory Simon, President of Biden Cancer Initiative, Dr. Bahija Jallal, Head of MedImmune, Canan Dagdeviren, Associate Professor, Wearable Electronics, MIT Media Lab, Christer Fugelsang, Professor, Royal Institute of Technology and Astronaut, Mouna Esmaeilzadeh, Founder of SciLife Clinic, Maria Strømme, Professor Nanotechnology, Uppsala University, Dr. Laurent Leksell, Chairman of Elekta and Hans Stråberg, Chairman of Atlas Copco.
